Rotary Program:

DIETHER HAENICKE, "Johannes Gutenberg and the Beginning of Modern Times": Often we take for granted the availability of instant, accurate news and viewpoints. Prior to Gutenberg and his invention of movable type, written material was the province of very few. Information was transferred by word-of-mouth and, consequently, was unreliable at best. With the availability of written information, ordinary people were able to learn of the world beyond their doorsteps and to make decisions based on fact. The presentation was scholarly and received a well-deserved, extended ovation.
